President's Message

Moving Forward Also Means Looking Back

Pam Doolittle

I've spent much of my last few president messages talking about progress and the future. Some of those topics include introducing new USDF initiatives such as e-Trak that bring learning right to your desktop, as well as pointing members to the chapter activities that continue to populate our 2011 calendar.

I'm always excited to share the new ways WDCTA and USDF are trying to advance the education of members. Yet my good friends will tell you I hold great respect for historical perspectives and for individuals who have gone before us to pave that progress. I learn from their stories, and I am inspired by their commitment and passion. My favorite books, for example, are biographies and historical novels that describe the thoughts and passions of people who helped form our great democracy.

And in this same spirit, I hold great reverence for people who developed and passed down the principles that form the basis of our sport. It is true that there are several systems of classical training that a person may subscribe to, which can offer a good debate over the dinner table! But in the end, I believe good training and true horsemanship is manifest by the partnerships that grow between horse and rider. These lasting partnerships span decades in some cases, and are truly a relationship that should be celebrated and honored.

The Century Club, organized by The Dressage Foundation, is one such program that honors longevity in the sport. Becoming part of this elite group of equestrians is no easy task. To be honored as a member, the pair must compete at a USEF-recognized show, and the sum of the ages of the horse and rider must be at least 100 or more years old. Given that the average life expectancy of the horse is about 25 years—that sets the rider age at a minimum of 75. The idea for this was borne out of a suggestion made by the late Dr. Max Gahwyler, a USDF Hall of Fame inductee who joined the Century Club as member number two in 1996.

One directive of this program that I found particularly poignant: "The rider need not show everything at their level of ride, but it is important to show that rider and horse work well together." The latest Century Club newsletter introduces us to recent inductees. Their life stories describe challenges such as overcoming cancer, starting their dressage education late in life, and riding cows because her parents could not afford a horse!

One thing unites all of these members, and that is the joy and love they have found in their friendships with their horses, as well as with the people that have supported them in their journey. I encourage you to take some time to read their stories. I promise you will find inspiration in what they share.

Although he's not mentioned in the list of Century Club inductees, one of my riding mentors, Kurd Albrecht Von Zeigner, is someone I've held in the highest regard as a true horseman and master of our sport. He's published several books on the subject. His latest book, "Elements of Dressage," can be found online by navigating to books.google.com and then searching the title. The Colonel, as his students call him, served as an officer of the German calvary in World War II. I've known him since I was a teen, and during that time heard the stories describing how he and other cavalry members worked to save horses from the destruction of war. Entwined in this story of war was also a love story on how he lost and then found the love of his life and wife, Elizabeth. After the war, the Colonel became a licensed riding instructor, and besides teaching, earned many national and international honors in both dressage and jumping. He eventually earned the German Riding Badge of Gold. The family von Ziegner founded the Reitshule Mechtersen in 1971.

He began traveling to the United States to teach riding clinics in the early 80s. I met him first at a clinic hosted by judge, Jayne Ayers, at her Hearthstone Farm around that time. Besides teaching professionals and serious adult amateurs, he also very much enjoyed teaching clinics for the Run-o-the-Mill Pony Club. The Rietschule Mechtersen became a mecca of sorts for his U.S. students looking for intense instruction. I had the privilege of working as a student on his farm, which was made twice the blessing given the apartment he arranged for me was right over the house of some very good, friendly and generous bakers.

Shortly after I arrived at the Schule, I had my spurs taken away. It was done very quietly and politely. He simply asked me to "Stop for a moment, please." And he took them off. He set them on the wall by the whips, and proceeded teaching the lesson. He did not yell, nor did he explain anything. The message was pretty clear: My equitation was not worthy of spurs.

He said often, "There is no other way to ride than through honest work. There's no modern way or old-fashioned way. There is only the right way or the wrong way."

I was expected to do it the right way. The right way was not forced, but rather worked honestly towards friendship and collaboration. I never put the spurs on again for the duration of my stay in Germany. Even for years after, I rarely used them. On the occasion I felt I needed them, I would discover quickly that they didn't really fix the problem. Using them to force a reaction was the "wrong way." I learned to use spurs as a refining tool rather than a means to an end.

The last time I rode under the Colonel in a clinic was in 2005. I spent the weekend at the home of my friend, who hosted the clinic, and was able to spend time outside of the clinic to talk to the Colonel. In sharing our memories of older days, I retold the spur story to my friends at the dinner table. Everyone laughed, while the Colonel smiled proudly. The next day, he asked my friend, Ann, to be sure she had a camera for my riding lesson. As we wrapped up the ride, he ceremoniously presented me with a beautiful pair of spurs. Ann captured the picture that for me represents a lesson learned, as well as a friendship and mentorship spanning an ocean and decades.

I've remained in contact with him since that ride in 2005. He turned 90 just a few years ago. He shared with me that his birthday present to himself was a lovely five-year-old mare. He believes there's one more Grand Prix horse in him to train. Although he has one of his grandsons doing much of the jumping and hacking, he still sits on the horse and closely monitors the progress. By now, I believe he is eligible for the Century Club—at least meeting the age requirement. Stories like the Colonel's and the Century Club members remind me that accomplishments in our sport are not only measured by ribbons or medals, but also by the quality of that "honest work" we put into developing our horses into happy athletes and willing partners.

So members, as spring begins to filter into the weather forecast, make an effort to turn off the computers and DVD machines and spend some time at the barn and in the saddle. Practice some of the exercises you've read or learned about in video clips or magazines, or invest in you and your horse's education by taking a lesson or two. Share what you've learned with others—even write an article for the eQuester!

Whatever the path, I hope it is one that brings you and your horse together in mutual respect and collaboration.

I learned a couple of steps to the rumba (I had rhythm for about three minutes), but what I'll take away is the revelation of how a horse must feel in the dance partnership, waiting for the subtle pressure of the lead dancer (the rider) to signal what direction, speed and step will be taken next.

I was inspired by the words and determination of Jessica Jo Tate, our guest speaker.

And I learned that I can actually out-sprint Dr. Doug Langer in the last 30 seconds of a silent auction...in high heels!

These were some of the things I experienced at the WDCTA Annual Conference and Awards Banquet, which will be a major feature in the April issue of the eQuester and will be wonderfully illustrated through the photographs of member, Heather McManamy, owner of ShortHorse Photography. (In my opinion, Heather is a photographic artist.)

Until then, I have included the list and photographs of all the 2010 WDCTA Year-End award winners. Mary Hanneman, our out-going award coordinator, worked with Kim Amini, owner of Midwest English Tack, to come up with some absolutely fabulous awards: beautiful fleece jackets, gorgeous halters and a stunning jewelry box for the musical kur award.

It was a superb way to kick off WDCTA activities in 2011!

Watch for other educational, inspiring and fun events coming in 2011—including clinics with Tom Poulin, Janet Foy and Maryal Barnett, plus the “Dressage Through the Levels” symposium featuring Steffen Peters and Janet Foy.

Now, could we please see the early spring that the ground hog promised us? I am so ready to participate in clinics and shows. My winter riding boots are ready to be retired and my riding boots are clean, polished and ready to be put on!

AWARDS ELIGIBILITY EXPANDED!

Effective for the current awards year: Now the same rider/horse combination may win the same award for three consecutive years at Intro Level through Fourth Level. (For the FEI levels, it is already possible for the same rider/horse combination to win the same award for an unlimited number of consecutive years.) This change is intended to help horse/rider partnerships that, for example, aren't quite ready to move up to the next level or an illness or injury prevents the combination from moving up to the next level the following year.

Send in your awards registration form soon! Show season is just around the corner in Wisconsin (and has already started for those lucky enough to go south for the winter). Remember, you must send in your registration form found on the WDCTA website seven days prior to the first show you want to count toward year-end awards.

THE YEAR OF THE NEW DRESSAGE TESTS — ARE YOU READY?

Even if you don't show, these four hours with Maryal Barnett will help you with training your horse. Attend the seminar, "A Judge's Perspective on the New Dressage Tests for Training and Showing, with Maryal, a noted judge and clinician. Details: see page 17.

Feeding Horses: Effects on Human and Equine

By Dr. Bryan Walddridge
Kentucky Equine Research

Mold spores and organic dust are an important cause and aggravator of respiratory disease in both humans and horses. Working with horses has been recognized as a potential respiratory hazard since the 1700s. Potential allergens and respiratory irritants encountered by humans in normal contact with horses include horse dander, dust, grain mites, powdered feed supplements, mold, fungal spores, and endotoxins (potent toxins produced by certain types of common gut bacteria).

Researchers in New Zealand investigated the respiratory health of horse trainers.¹ Among the horse trainers who responded to the survey, few reported using breathing protection. The risk of having signs of bronchitis was increased 2.3 times among male horse trainers who worked 40 hours or more per week training horses. Another strong risk factor was mixing powdered supplements into horse feed, which also increased the risk of bronchitis 2.3 times. Spreading out hay almost doubled (1.9 times) the chance of horse trainers having signs of “farmer’s lung” (organic dust toxic syndrome). Interestingly, cleaning stalls, cutting chaff (hay), and bedding type were not significantly associated with an increased risk of respiratory disease.

Even good-quality hay contains mold spores and dust, and the best ventilated barn is full of dust compared to an outside paddock. For these reasons, the respiratory tracts of horses kept in stalls are constantly assaulted by inhaled irritants and potential allergens.

Both humans and horses are exposed to large amounts of potential respiratory tract irritants in their normal environments.

Environmental management is essential to control allergic airway diseases such as heaves and inflammatory airway disease (IAD), and no treatments will be as successful without changing the horse’s environment. Ideally, horses affected with heaves or IAD should be kept outside at all times. An effective method used to produce clinical signs of heaves in an affected horse is to bring the horse into a stall from pasture and bed its stall with straw.

Humans with allergic respiratory disease should consult a physician for the best advice. The study above pointed out that many equine caretakers do not wear breathing protection such as face masks when working in dusty environments, which would be an important first step to avoiding problems.

Supplements can be made less dusty by mixing them into molasses or sweet feeds that contain molasses. The molasses binds the “fines” or dust. The addition of water, liquid supplements, or yogurt is also helpful to reduce exposure of dust to both the caretaker and the horse.

Soaking hay can be messy and problematic, but will decrease the amount of dust in the hay. Commercial hay steamers are now available that effectively reduce the quantity of mold spores. Feeding hay on the ground limits the amount of dust particles and mold spores that the horse breathes while eating by naturally allowing the horse to clear mucus and inhaled particles from its respiratory tract and preventing any saliva or feed material from entering the trachea (windpipe). Storing hay in barn lofts increases and constantly exposes horses to dust and mold spores from hay.

Instead of straw, horses can be bedded on wood shavings, cardboard, or paper bedding, which has been shown to greatly reduce dust in the stall environment.

Both humans and horses are exposed to large amounts of potential respiratory tract irritants in their normal environments and this exposure is even greater in a barn. It is important for humans to realize that exposure to inhaled irritants is nearly constant for them and their horses. Reducing this exposure will improve respiratory health for both horses and their caretakers.

WDCTA Southwest Chapter proudly presents:

A Judge's Perspective on the 2011 National Dressage Tests: Feedback for Training and Showing

Featuring: Maryal Barnett, FEI "C" and USEF "S" Dressage judge

March 19th, 2011, 1-4 PM

Alicia Ashman Library
733 North High Point Road
Madison, WI

The new USEF Introductory through Fourth level national tests have hit the presses! What do those changes mean for those entering at "A"? Maryal will share ways you can use the more detailed directive ideas and the judge's feedback to improve your scores in the ring, as well as guide your at-home training plan. Even if it's not in your plans to show this summer, this program is still for you (as well as your trainer and/or coach), to help guide your training and goals for improving dressage with your equine partner. Program will include video and commentary.

Maryal Barnett is an FEI "C" Dressage Judge, USEF "S" Dressage Judge and Canadian Equestrian Federation Senior Dressage Judge. She is a passionate educator serving as faculty for the USDF "L" Education program and subsequent "r" and "R" Dressage Judge Training programs, as well as the USDF Instructor Certification program. She has chaired the USDF University committee and currently serves on the Executive Board of the Dressage Foundation. Maryal has earned numerous regional and national awards as a competitor, and her students continue to gain recognition as respected competitors, instructors and judges.
