Educational Opportunities: With WDCTA, it's a Piece of Cake...

Pam Doolittle

Growing in Numbers and Benefits

I was thrilled to open our last membership roster to see that WDCTA membership has now surpassed 190 members! Thank you and welcome to all members, both brand new and returning!

WDCTA continues to move ahead "Forward, Calm and Straight" through 2011. I hope you find the information in this newsletter and on the website helpful and even inspiring. If you haven't yet, join our Facebook page (search for the group WDCTA) to stay tuned in to the latest updates on WDCTA programs and services.

Your WDCTA membership automatically entitles you to a general membership with the USDF. As such, you should be receiving a monthly copy of the USDF publication, Connections, which features articles on training and showing, as well as advertises regional and national educational events.

And remember, USDF has expanded its website to include educational content on e-Trak which you can access by logging on to the USDF website using your GM member number.

Please feel free to contact me with any questions about your membership or suggestions on how we can work to improve your experience with WDCTA. We are doing our best to be your educational partner!

Steffen Peters in Wisconsin Recently and Returning this Fall!

Steffen Peters returned to the Midwest Horse Fair this April and once again shared his stories and experience with dressage enthusiasts in attendance. Big congratulations to WDCTA members, Jessica Davis, Katie Hiller and Megan McIsaac, who were selected to ride in the mounted instructional sessions.

For those of you inspired by his teaching and philosophy: Steffen Peters returns in November along with Janet Foy, when the Southwest Chapter presents the symposium, "Through the Levels." Registration info and sponsorship opportunities are available on our website and in the newsletter. I hope you will join us for this fantastic event.

Taking a Break from Horses and Other Responsibilities

For spring break this year, my family took a break from our horse, chicken and dog duties to enjoy some indoor water fun at the Kalahari Resort in the Wisconsin Dells.

I positioned this to my family as a celebration of surviving the brutally cold and snowy winter of 2010/2011. I declared, "It's about time we simply wear our swimming suits all day and eat cake."

My girls, it turns out, are grand planners. In contrast, my husband, Dan, and I can hardly plan ahead enough to pull off an evening dinner! So when the girls heard me mention "Celebration," they hatched a plan to make a special celebratory cake. They whispered in their bedrooms for a week and drew out many iterations of their grand plan. The Thursday before our departure, they banned me from the kitchen until we left Saturday morning, leaving poor Dan in charge of all the cooking and clean up. I was directed to announce my entry at the doorway if I wished to pass and was often led through the kitchen with a towel over my head. I promise you, I did not peek.

As I finished packing Saturday morning, my daughter, Cassy, reminded me with a smile that I had better only bring my suit, PJs and a tooth brush. She waited to take my bag to the car, which I was not allowed to enter until they had the "surprise" securely and secretly packed away.

We had a great afternoon at the park and at about 5:30 p.m., the girls suggested we go back to the room to get ready for dinner. When I came out of the bathroom wearing PJs, Dan surprised me with a glass of wine and some new slippers. The girls led me to a table where I was to "put my feet up and relax" while they ordered dinner. One bowl of salad and two slices of pizza later, I found myself once again with a towel over my head. I could hear the giggles and excitement in their voices as they worked to present their creation.

What a moment it was to see the creativity, artistry and knowledge of dressage displayed in the cake they created. Look closely at the pictures and you'll see carrots and apples, the dressage letters around the freshly dragged arena, a riding helmet and crop, bales of hay and horseshoes for luck—it was all there.

As I opened my eyes, my kids yelled, "Happy spring! Mom, you made it through winter!"

The cake was chocolate with cream cheese layers on the inside; the cream cheese was layered with thinly sliced, fresh strawberries. All the sculpted detail was done in a white chocolate fondant, which was then hand painted. It was truly delicious. I had two pieces!

I love art that captures the special moments between mother and child. The postures often show a wise and patient mom holding the attention of her object of affection, who looks back with a youthful, inquisitive (perhaps even mischievous) expression. The fun and reward for me as a mom (and as a teacher), though, are those moments when youth provide a glimpse of the adults they will someday be; also wise and talented, yet so much hope, promise and excitement for the future. Thank you, girls, for the cake!

But even more so, thank you for being such exceptional people.

To moms everywhere, Happy Mother's Day!

On the Bit

Caryn Vesperman, editor

A few weeks ago, I loaded Sally in the trailer and off we went to an area Pony Club. There Sally and I demonstrated some of the Grand Prix movements to kids and their parents. After the demo, I put Sally in a stall and spent the next four hours or so helping 14 kids, grade schoolers to teenagers, learn a few things about dressage. It was a challenge to teach groups of three or more kids at one time, but overall, it was fun because the kids tried so hard.

Sometimes you think that you don't have time to volunteer for one more thing, but for me, the "payment" was worth it. I loved receiving the card signed by all the kids.

All of you have some knowledge or skill that you can share too. Perhaps you are a primo braider (not my forte) or have a lot of grooming tips and advice you could share with Pony Clubbers or 4H kids. You could scribe for a show or act as a gate keeper or announcer. Or, you could groom for a friend at a show.

Another idea for volunteering? WDCTA needs you too. Chapters are putting on clinics and shows. They may be looking for homes to hold meetings, and they're always looking for program ideas for chapter meetings or events to participate in. Whatever you can do will be appreciated—and it's a great way to meet new dressage and eventing enthusiasts.

You may be "giving," but believe me, you'll end up receiving a whole lot more!

Eventing News: David O'Connor Recommended as Next U. S. Eventing Chef d'Equipe/Technical Advisor

The Eventing Eligible Athlete Committee and Eventing High Performance Committee have unanimously recommended David O'Connor to be the Eventing Chef d'Equipe/Technical Advisor to succeed Capt. Mark Phillips in 2013. The recommendation will go to the USEF High Performance Working Group before being presented to the USEF Executive Committee.

The search for Capt. Phillips replacement began in 2010. Nine applications were received by the Search Committee. The Committee shortlisted two applicants: O'Connor and Leslie Law.

The depth of quality of the applicant field was impressive: it included some of the biggest legends in the sport, and after extensive research thorough discussions and candid interviews, the Eventing Eligible Athlete Committee unanimously voted to recommend O'Connor. On April 15, the Eventing High Performance Committee voted to unanimously to endorse this recommendation. The High Performance Working Group and the Executive Committee will meet to review this recommendation.

O'Connor has extensive knowledge of the sport in the U.S. and across the globe. He was the Individual Eventing Gold Medalist at the Sydney Olympic Games and he coached the Canadian Eventing Team to Team Silver at the 2010 Alltech FEI World Equestrian Games. O'Connor has proven leadership skills having served as the President of the USEF and the Chairman of FEI Group IV since his retirement from International competition in 2004. On the field of play, he is renowned for producing top results from both horses and riders.

Identifying a Chef D'Equipe/Technical Advisor now will allow for a smooth transition for the riders and the eventing program when Mark Phillips retires in 2012. Phillips has successfully led the program since 1994, having won medals at four Pan American Games, four World Equestrian Games and four Olympic Games.

FarmVet Sponsorship of USDF Adult Clinic Series Adds Member Discount to Benefits

United States Dressage Federation (USDF) announced today that FarmVet, a premier source for animal health products and supplies, signed on as the title sponsor for the USDF Adult Clinic series with Lilo Fore and will be offering a 5% online discount to all USDF members.

Linda Schultz, Director of Marketing for USDF, commented, "FarmVet is our newest sponsor, and we're thrilled they joined us and could add to our member benefits package with the online discount."

FarmVet President and CEO, Christian Currey, adds, "FarmVet is excited to be a new sponsor of the USDF, and we're looking forward to the Adult Clinic Series with Lilo Fore this year."

The USDF Adult Clinic series with Lilo Fore will be hosted in each of the nine regions over the next 24 months.

"These symposium-style clinics include both amateurs and professionals at a range of levels, with a variety of breeds, types and training issues," stated Kathie Robertson,

USDF Education Program Senior Coordinator. "Lilo will involve the audience throughout each clinic to reinforce the training techniques demonstrated to maximize benefit to the auditors."

For more information about the clinics, visit the USDF website or contact the USDF office.

Gone Away...

Howard Nelson

Howard Nelson, a fixture of Silverwood Farm in Camp Lake for more than 20 years, died April 8, after a long battle with cancer.

He and Lisa Froehlig worked very hard to develop Silverwood Farm into the excellent show facility it is today.

He will be missed by all of us who knew him and appreciated his support of dressage and his quick wit and sense of humor.

See the DressageDaily article for more about Howard. Our condolences to his family and friends.

Worth the Waite

Condolences to WDCTA member Marie Caldwell on the loss of her horse, Worth the Waite. Anyone who knows Marie and "Worthy" were inspired by their partnership.

Worthy was diagnosed a few years ago with EPM. Initially he lost at least half his muscle tone in his right hindquarters from the affliction, which caused weakness and unevenness in the use and swing of his right hind leg. Marie brought him back slowly and carefully.

In spite of the EPM setback, Marie moved up the levels with Worthy, including teaching him piaffe and tempe changes.

We're sorry for your loss, Marie. We will miss seeing you with the big, sweet, bay gelding working his heart out for you.

Feed Management May Influence Behavior

In many cases, feeding practices for today's horses are quite different from the eating patterns found among wild horses. The effects of feed types and feed management have been studied to determine the effects, if any, of modern feeding practices on equine behavior.

A natural pattern of unlimited grazing provides horses with exercise, social contact, hours of chewing, high saliva production, a relatively steady supply of ingested material entering the stomach, and only moderate fluctuations in blood glucose and insulin. Stalled horses eating large grain meals may meet their caloric requirement, but their other physiologic needs may be thrown into turmoil.

Studies show that behaviors such as coprophagy (eating manure), stall-chewing, and eating of straw bedding are less common in stalled horses that are given large amounts of hay and more common in stalled horses given an all-concentrate diet. Research has pointed out that horses eating large grain meals have significant fluctuations in plasma glucose and insulin, possibly causing peaks and troughs in energy that may be seen as nervous, unpredictable behavior. They may also be subject to digestive and metabolic disorders like hindgut acidosis, colic, and gastric ulceration.

They are What They can Eat

While an all-forage diet might be the most natural, many heavily exercised horses are not able to consume enough calories from hay or grass to fuel the demands of training and performance. Replacement of some dietary carbohydrates with fiber and fat is helpful in avoiding glycemic and insulinemic fluctuations, thereby leveling out peaks and slumps in energy. The addition of oil leads to slower gastric emptying so horses may feel full longer, reducing stress caused by the urge to graze. Various studies have shown a tendency toward a decline in aggressive behavior, less reactivity to sudden visual stimulation (such as opening an umbrella), and less moving around and startled reaction to loud noises or invasion of space (pressure) in horses eating diets with more fat, more hay, and/or lower

Weaning is a stressful time for young horses, and the same trends (less stress, lower levels of cortisol, reduced reactivity to novel visual stimuli) were seen in weanlings fed a diet higher in fat and fiber. These weanlings also spent more time investigating novel objects and completed a handling test more quickly than foals fed traditional diets high in starch and sugar. A recent study on insulin resistance suggested that over long periods of time, fat and fiber diets may facilitate better patterns of glucose regulation resulting in an effect on brain function, specifically more efficient production of the mood regulator serotonin. This effect was seen in foals fed a fat and fiber diet.

There is also some evidence that pregnant mare diets may influence insulin sensitivity in their offspring. Up to 80 days of age, foals born to mares fed starch and sugar diets tended to have higher levels of glucose and insulin than those whose dams ate a fat and fiber diet during late pregnancy. Foals of mares fed the starch and sugar diet also tended to have lower insulin sensitivity at 160 days of age, even though all mares were fed the fat and fiber diet after the foals were born.

Supplementation with tryptophan has been shown to increase alertness and attention in humans, and tryptophan depletion causes anxious behavior in rats. Tryptophan supplements are marketed as calming aids for horses in spite of the fact that there is no evidence that a calming effect is seen in equines. There is some evidence that various herbal preparations may calm excitable horses, but the active ingredients of herbal preparations may be somewhat unpredictable, making it difficult to be certain of their effect on behavior.

Anticipating Being Fed a Factor

Oral stereotypies such as cribbing and locomotor stereotypies such as weaving may be related to feeding practices and/or digestive function. Some studies have shown that cribbing, which is not seen in populations of wild or feral horses, rises in intensity during the hour before feeding of stalled horses, and peaks four to eight hours after feeding. Research has shown that weaving is most common right before food delivery. Dividing the daily ration into multiple feedings reduced the overall incidence of cribbing but increased the incidence of weaving. Any factor that reduces the stress of barn confinement, especially providing increased visual access to other horses, tends to reduce the incidence of weaving.

Environmental enrichment has little or no effect on cribbing; this behavior seems to be increased by a low-forage or high-grain diet and decreased somewhat when horses are bedded on straw, possibly because straw provides another edible fiber source. The precise relationship between cribbing and gastrointestinal discomfort has not been established. Large grain meals increase the risk of colic and have been shown to alter the pH of the gastrointestinal tract.

Stress on Foals and Weanlings

Foals that crib show significantly greater evidence of gastric inflammation and early ulceration than those of normal foals. Feeding an antacid reduces inflammation and ulceration and tends to result in a reduction in cribbing behavior. Also, cribbing leads to the production of small amounts of saliva, a buffer of acid in the stomach. The stress of weaning is both psychological and physical. The weanling is deprived of milk which has been a component of its daily diet, and few foals make an immediate and smooth transfer to eating grain. Even brief periods of not eating can lead to acidity, ulceration, and an increased risk for some types of colic. However, not all foals develop digestive problems or stereotypies. In one study, 42 of 186 foals—slightly fewer than one in four—began to show wood-chewing, cribbing, or both after weaning.

In general, the best practice for avoiding or minimizing problems involves keeping a horse's environment and feed management practices as close as possible to those of horses living in natural conditions.
